ProÂ .The present invention relates to the construction of a vapor generator of the type disclosed in my prior U.S. Pat. No. 4,183,287 of Mar. 15, 1980 entitled "Apparatus for Generating a Freon Atmosphere". The elements forming the vapor generator described in said patent are in the form of a tray-like stack or stack of panels that are arranged and assembled so as to form an enclosed volume. When the vapor generator is energized, a gaseous material, such as Freon, is caused to vaporize within the volume thus formed. The vapor thus generated is caused to move through the volume of vapor generator, under pressure, to the point of exit. For the purpose of avoiding leakage of the vaporized Freon from the enclosure within which it is generated, it is important that the panels of the stack or stack be arranged and assembled so that the form of the vapor generator is of the leak proof type. In my prior U.S. Pat. No. 4,183,287 the vapor generator includes a pair of spaced apart generally parallel side walls, and a generally horizontal bottom wall, with the panels or stacked, being disposed between the side walls and the bottom wall. One of the side walls is provided with an inlet opening for the passage of Freon therethrough. The inlet opening is covered by a flap. The flap is flexed or pressed by Freon gas entering the inlet opening so as to engage the flap in sealing relationship with the side wall. The flap is spring-biased against the side wall in the closed position, with the gap between the flap and the side wall being fixed. The gap between the flap and the side wall must be very small. The stresses caused in the flap when the inlet opening is initially closed, and the stresses produced in the flap when the vapor generator is energized, are so great that, even though the flap may be "floating" (i.e., not totally seated against the side wall) for a time, as soon as the vapor generator is energized there is so great a pressure within the volume of the vapor generator that the flap and side wall

He first appeared in the drama in Episode 1, and then continued his role until Episode 17. Park is portrayed by comedian Lee Seung-joon. Background and career Park debuted as a singer and actor under the label of Precue-programming, which is a subsidiary of Seoul-based creative production company, Brocom Entertainment. His debut song was "Lovey-dovey." He composed and sung the song with SM Entertainment. Park has released six singles and one studio album (of six) so far. Personal life

Park was born in Seoul on December 30, 1978. He has three siblings and no father. He left his hometown at 19 years old to pursue his career in music. Park has been romantically linked to actresses Seo Ji-seon and Go Ara, who stars in the hit K-drama Strongest K-POP Star as Park's older sister. Controversies On January 17, 2014, Park made an appearance on the South Korean talk show True Monday on SBS Gayo. During the show, he talked about his previous scandal of dating and being married to Seo Ji-seon. It was subsequently revealed that at the time, he was secretly married and living with Seo Ji-seon in a villa. He even became very much attached to Ji-seon, but she rejected him after he revealed his identity to her. Park went on to say that he regretted revealing his true identity, because he was worried that she might be upset with him.
