punishment for the people who have been given liberty and injured those who have not been given liberty.” Indeed, doing so is against the commandment to love thy neighbor (Exodus 22:21).

According to rabbinic exegesis, this is the meaning of the words: “You shall not seek revenge.” From the wording of this commandment, it seems that this means not taking revenge for wrongs that are against us — whether these wrongs are characterized as physical violence or the infliction of losses. A case in point would be an example where a man was killed by an individual who had previously wronged him (as was the case with Abraham), but his death was not at the hands of a physical attacker. Likewise, if one wrongs another and does not stop at the point when the other person is incensed and seeks revenge, then it may seem that a punishment is warranted and the individual who was wronged may seek to exact revenge. Thus, according to rabbinic law, a person who takes the life of another — whether this person is an attacker or a victim — is guilty of murder and will have this person's life taken from him.
