Q: Selecting Specific Packages From Docker Registry I am new to Docker and am starting to use it to "simplify" deploying my apps. From what I understand, the docker registry is a "central" location for keeping images (packages). I have a web service that has a web.config file. If the web.config file needs to be updated, in order to change the database connection string, I have to build a new image. Right now, I am simply referencing the image from the docker registry, and it's the best way to do it. However, I want to make the deployment more convenient. So the question is this: If I have a web.config file, and it's configured to use the wrong connection string, is there any way to get the image directly from the registry? Or, if I create an image that has the desired connection string in it's configuration, can I then just pull it and have that new image available (so I don't have to rebuild)? Thanks, Perry A: You can also use this script to build your image in the docker registry, and run a container from this image. #!
/usr/bin/env bash # Trigger docker login docker login # Create a private docker registry using docker registry create... -a -b docker registry create --name=docker.myregistry.net -a -b \ -c docker.myregistry.net \ --registry-id= \ --insecure-registry=docker.myregistry 6d1f23a050
